ADAMS, ELIMINATOR DEFEND HOME TURF IN TERRE HAUTE

(Terre Haute, IN) Driving a monster truck is a demanding task under the best of circumstances, but when you squeeze five of the fire-breathing behemoths into an indoor venue the size of the ISU Rose-Hullman Center in Terre Haute, IN, minding your P's and Q's becomes your number one priority.

This past weekend, the AMP Live Events tour invaded the Hullman Center in Terre Haute for one night of intense monster truck freestyle and match-racing action. Greg Adams and the Bar's Leaks Eliminator were on-hand to defend their home turf, as their team is based a mere 30 minutes east of Terre Haute. Adams' Bar's Leaks sponsored F-150 would suffer minor issues with the fuel delivery system early in the night, but would overcome those gremlins to put on a marathon freestyle that would out-class the rest of the field.

"Every time we race close to home, we've almost come to expect mechanical troubles," laughed Adams during the autograph session following the event. "Fortunately it wasn't anything major, and we were able to lay down a really good arena freestyle session for our hometown fans."

The highly-polished concrete floor of the Hullman Center tested each drivers' abilities to the max, constantly challenging both man and machine. "When we race in bigger venues, there isn't as much to worry about as far as retaining walls, barriers, parked trucks, etcetera," explained Adams. "But when we come inside during the winter for smaller events like these, you really have to rely on your intuition as far as knowing where your truck is and where its heading." Adams showed off his razor-sharp abilities in Terre Haute, much to the delight of his hometown crowd.

"We stumbled a bit in racing because of those little mechanical gremlins, but other than that we had a fantastic night, and I think the fans went home happy," said Adams. "You really have to step up to beat guys like Rick Long (Team Bigfoot), and thankfully our Bar's Leaks team was up to the task in Terre Haute!"
